Thought From Ted

A couple of weeks ago, I had to have a little oral surgery a tooth extracted and some bone loss and other treatments that will eventually lead to an implant (since it is one of my front teeth, after all). While everything went smoothly, there are several aspects that take some getting used to. No crunchy food or biting with my front teeth or drinking through a straw are some of the rules.

But the biggest issue is having to wear a retainer over my upper teeth. It has a nice filler so it's not how it looks that is the issue. It's talking. I like to talk "Chicago fast" and I can't do that right now. I have to be more precise in the words I say and intentional with how I form certain sounds or words. In other words (no pun intended), something I have done all my life I do differently now. I have even felt self-conscious about how I sound. Something that I have always done without thinking, I now have to often think about what I'm saying (maybe not a bad thing!).

Yet I have learned something valuable in this: how important it is to always be aware of the difficulties – visible or not – that someone may be wrestling with. As Christians, to not look past or overlook someone else's struggles may be one of the very best ways to share God's love. Who knows what someone else is going through or experiencing unless we open our hearts and our ears with Christ's compassion? I am hopeful that will be something I will be better from going through this experience.

Yours In Christ,

The Rev. Ted McCulloch
Stated Clerk, Presbytery of Lake Huron
